THE CERTAINTY OF UN-CERTAINTY

We end the first quarter of 2011 on a high note: even though Egypt, Libya, sharply higher oil prices and the Japanese disaster were disturbing developments, the Manhattan real estate market roared forward with gusto, producing several record sales prices, very strong volume and pricing in general. We have entered the era of TURBULENCE CERTAINTY, and it appears we are able to continue with business-as-usual despite how crazy things may be.

With the word out that multiple bidding has re-emerged, and a general consensus that the markets have improved, many sellers are feeling re-empowered. Some may be justified in feeling this way, but only if they own a really prized property, in a strong building and location: There are some delusional sellers who feel their mediocre real estate is worth that extra premium.....they could be severely disappointed if they have not sold their properties within the next few months as the full effects of inflation take hold. And yes, we are in inflationary times: the higher oil, food and cotton prices will affect everything sooner or later. Did we forget how our beloved government acknowledged we were in recession many, many months after the recession began? Don't be surprised now if they acknowledge the inflation rate is actually higher than they claim it is. Inflation will impact the real estate market mostly when rates rise (they are rising already). As of April 1st, new banking laws will have the banks pass on several new closing fees/costs to us the consumer (Yes, I know we bailed several banks out, and now they will be paying a dividend, but....) Lets also be clear that much of Manhattan's real estate success story is closely related to the profitability of our banking industry. How can you take advantage of inflation? We don't have the answers for this other than the knowledge that interest rates are bound to rise, so owning a mortgage at low rates would be a solid investment for sure. Forget about cash under the mattress: gold would be a much better choice.

GOOD NEWS FOR NEW YORK CITY? Office vacancy rates are down (the lowest in the USA with Honolulu), the State has actually passed a budget early (fourth time in over 25 years!) although it cut school budgets rather dramatically, Wall Street appears healthy and the DOW remains above 12,000, foreign buyers still consider Manhattan a 'good buy' and keep buying up prize properties around the city. Rents are estimated to rise by 3.4% in 2011, above the official inflation rate.

LUXEFIND

Privacy has indeed become a luxury: Launched at the Stockholm Furniture Fair 2011, the Box Lounger and the Box Sofa come from LOOK INDUSTRIES. Offering a creative privacy solution, the Box Lounger provides a quiet and visually private cover from surrounding noise and movement, a common gripe in Manhattan. The lounger offers a neat solution to the problem often found in open loft apartments, open offices and public spaces. The Box Lounger is a cozy box with a soft sound absorbing material on the inside that reduces outside sounds, making it a perfect place to spend time in privacy. Lookindustries.com
